

Grasp manufacturing opportunities with the right technology

In a recent RSM study, we explored the key business challenges faced by manufacturers. The findings were clear in that many manufacturers have digital change high on the agenda, but often struggle to find practical ways to make it happen.

Your challenges

Process automation developed through technology innovation has enabled manufacturers to become more efficient, reduce cost of production and scale their operations.

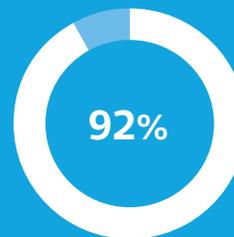

However an ageing workforce, rising labour & energy costs, and increased industrial legislation have made it harder for manufacturers to remain competitive.

Manufacturers need to have the flexibility across their supply chain, production, distribution, order management, and accounting processes to be able to test, launch and retire products and services accordingly.

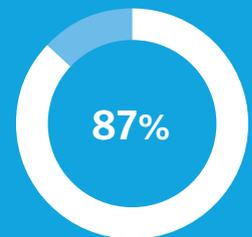

Often firms are unable to integrate digital systems, resulting in critical business information remaining trapped in silos and ultimately leading to less informed strategic decisions.

The ability to stay one step ahead of demanding customers and competitors is subsequently impacted and this is why many manufacturers are turning to cloud ERP systems to improve business efficiency and reduce wastage of time and resources.

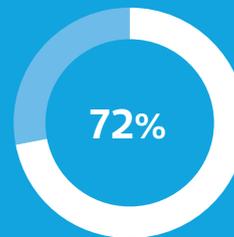

RSM manufacturing study findings revealed that:

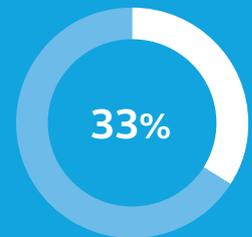

will increase their spend on digital change in the year ahead.

believe digital change will positively impact their organisation.

say digital change is among their top 3 business priorities.

will devote more than 3% of 2019 annual expenditure to digital change.
